Writing

4) Have you ever experienced feeling of regret not having certain useful skill or not being able to do something without it?

(It is widely acknowledged that having certain useful skill or not being able to do something without it?) It is widely acknowledged that having beneficial ability offers you many merits. However, not everyone knows what is the best one's of them. Many people accept that wisdom and knowledge should be counted as a basis of all skills. Nevertheless, being smart doesn't guarantee any success or result in long term. Moreover, study requires a lot of effort and more importantly, valuable time, that many youngsters lack of.

On the other hand, there is a skills such as being articulate and having gripping, assertive speech. Though some individuals doubt their importance. In reality, these skills unavoidably will be used in daily life, especially for teenagers. Social engineering, popularity among society and relationships are derived from them relatively. For me, as a student, it helped to maintain good attitude with colleagues and teachers. That consequently, played a major role in my overall study and mental health.
