IV Writing

With time, a lot of the aspects of life change. And teenagers are not an exception. Teens nowadays and teens, let's say 10 years ago are very different. So are the skills that they require. If so, what are the skills that the teenagers of today, in my opinion, should learn? Let's begin.

Like every student, they learn. Besides that, teenagers need to be ready for very important exams and like in the modern world of overflaming information. Skill required is - media literacy. "Why is that?" you may ask, as when is - media-literate people can filter wrong information from right, properly factcheck their info and can access higher quality information, that is not.

Second of all, critical thinking. Critical thinking is an ability of a mind to think independently from peer's authority, seeking reasoning from beyond of just blindly following peers. That type of thinking is incredibly important for the development of new, fresh ideas, thoughts and therefore, progress, which is so crucial for the modern world.

What about skills that express myself? It's literacy and open-mindedness. It helped me learn a lot of interesting information, credible experiences that would not be liked through if I wasn't open minded. Literacy in various kinds of fields helped me to find communities of same interest and define the field of research and work in the future, for me it's engineering of the nanomaterial technologies. Including all of the above, you should always be intellectually and mentally active.
